COMES NOW the Complainant, United States Environmental Protection Agency ('EPA'), in the above referenced case and proposes the following approach to structure of the process of Alternative Dispute Resolution (ADR) initiated on October 17, 2011, by Chief Administrative Law Judge Susan L. Biro.

Complainant proposes the following general approach to the ADR session, in the hopes of achieving an efficient and equitable use of the Court's time and resources, as between the Parties.

- (1) Mediator-ALJ Nissen meets initially, separately, with each party and directs that each communicate its respective position statement regarding the case to the Mediator-ALJ (and respond to any questions or concerns of the Mediator-ALJ);
- (2) Mediator-ALJ Nissen then holds a joint meeting/tele-conference call with both parties, and directs the Complainant and Respondent to each communicate its respective case in chief to the opposing party (and to respond to any questions or concerns of opposing party or the Mediator-ALJ);
- (3) Mediator-ALJ again meets with each party, separately, and informs each party of his confidential assessment of the strength of their respective positions;
- (4) Mediator-ALJ then holds a second joint meeting/teleconference call with both parties, thereby allowing them to offer any potentially modified positions towards a settlement; and,
- (5) The parties thereafter work either independently, or through the Mediator-ALJ's office, to attempt to achieve settlement in principle during the allotted time for ADR.

This schedule presumes a limited time for internal party discussions between activity Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4.

Complainant's counsel has apprised Respondent's counsel of this proposed approach to ADR, and requested that he consider a joint filing. Respondent's counsel has not, as of this filing, replied. Complainant does not believe that the (above) proposed approach to ADR would in any way prejudice Respondent.

Dated: November 3, 2011

Respectfully submitted,

Thomas P. Turner
